

The Last Word in Bachelor Quarters Is the Three-Room Apartment that Houses Jeff

Hunter, His Phonograph Records, Cameras and His Clothes. It's a Decorator's Delight.

Hunter's Hideaway

Jeff's new home is in Westwood, not too far from Fox studios where he toils. Living room and kitchen are connected by paneled dining bar. Color scheme is very masculine—off-white walls, pale green carpeting, beige drapes and couches. Now that Jeff and Barbara Rush have ironed out custody problems, son Chris is frequent guest in his dad's new home.

Hunter's a gourmet, likes to cook as well as eat. Decorative shelf in kitchen holds spices. Since Mexican jaunt, Jeff's become fond of Spanish food. He returned South of the Border for Seven Cities of Gold, is learning language.

Thermidor oven gets constant use, but Jeff doesn't worry about weight. His schedule includes weekly gym workouts, lots of skiing.

What the well-dressed man will wear. Silent valet holds latest in men's sports jackets—charcoal grey with dots of black and white. Striped weskit is a beauty, too.

A camera bug, guy does great portrait work, keeps favorites on display. Bedroom boasts grey walls and carpet, black furniture. Fancy shirt's a souvenir from Philippine Islands trip.

Handsome guy's got a wanderlust, so between films he treks to faraway places like Singapore (doll's a memento). Latest picture credit: Seven Angry Men on loanout to Allied Artists.
